Let me share this thought with you too please. Not many people in the trans community will publicly speak out against these type issues. I will. In fact I've been trying, but I don't have a platform. I've been in the news a number of times and had multiple discussions with reporters that one of the reasons I became non-binary and made it legal was to give these trans kids a legal identity that wouldn't require the medical agenda and subsequent sterilization.

I know a lot of folks in the GC community don't agree with what I've done either, but something had to be done to break the rigid gender binary. I think it's a start. The problem with turning trans people into males or females is of course they're expected to look like males or females, and that's where the medical equation enters the picture, in all of it's ugliness. I'm a regular reader of 4thwave now.

I've been operating under a much different and unpopular ideology of putting being trans under the lens of race and intersex, and asking the tough question of: "how did you come up with that I'm a female?" And "why was I made into a female?"

I don't subscribe to gender identity being the sole thing that determines my sex. If gender identity is real and I have a female gender identity and a male body, then I would be the equivalent of a mixed race person, not a cisgender person of the opposite sex of my biology. That's why I became non-binary. I recognize the harm that's being done by making males into females to actual females. And I wanted no further part of it.

All that said, if you get this sort of platform in the media and have the opportunity to work such stuff in, I'm willing to be quoted and interviewed for it. I'll go on record stating I don't agree with puberty blockers or the sterilization of children for better cosmetic outcomes to stop discrimination and any of these sorts of topics.

I was the first person in the U.S. to gain non-binary legal status and the trans community is quite upset by that, because they know what my views are.

Thanks for writing. I will take a look.

Full disclosure, they really pissed me off recently:

Hi Jamie.

So now you know I am the blogger for YTCP. I am not "out" so I appreciate your keeping my secret.

I have copied 4thwave on this email to keep her in the loop. We have discussed some of this generally, but I am not intending to speak for her.

First, THANK YOU. Thank you for writing such a wonderful piece. Thank you for working so hard on the post. And most of all, thank you for risking your self by speaking out.

4thwavetnow and I both felt that your post was very strong and will make an important impact. 4thwave called it a "righteous screed," as I recall. We are slower than we wanted to be in posting it only because 4thwave's computer crashed when she was working on edits.

Please be patient with us! We will get it up soon. 4th didn't think it needed too much in the way of edits, and I agree.

The one thing I might want to do if it's okay with you is to add a little preamble. I have a slight concern about nonbinary as an alternative to M and F because of where I see it going.

I want to you know that, after reading your blog post, I have a profound appreciation for what you were doing when you took on becoming the first legally nonbinary person, and I agree it could be incredibly beneficial if it gives people a way out that doesn't involve harm to the body.

Personally, my views on gender are informed in part by the writings of Carl Jung. He believed that every man has an inner feminine part of himself, and every woman has an inner masculine. He felt that these were distinct "splinter personalities," and saw them as so important that he named them "anima" and "animus" -- the Latin word for soul.

I think it is exactly these contrasexual energies that Jung intuited that inform many of the third gender designations we see in other cultures, and I agree it is healthy to have a culture that is accepting of these.

My concern about nb in the current climate is that WPATH is pushing a medical pathway for nonbinary people. It is clear to me that the DSM V gender dysphoria diagnostic criteria were written in such a way as to leave open the possibility of medical transition for nb folks (Magdalen Burns did video on this). In addition, I was at USPATH in February. (I would appreciate it if you didn't broadcast this.) I attended a presentation on treatment of nonbinary people that was all about hormones and surgery.

Finally, my last concern is that it seems to me that most of the young people identifying as nb are teen girls -- I suspect they are trying to be anything other than female. :(

The sick thing is, you created the legal designation as an alternative to help people avoid medical intervention. I'm afraid WPATH is using it to broaden the number of people eligible for medical intervention.

...and "transitioning" is the medical way of saying it. It's not something that people do; it's something that doctors do. intervention.

So I hope it is clear that I greatly respect and admire what you have done. At the same time, I have concerns about what WPATH and others are doing with it. I am hoping I can address this in a preamble of sorts. Does that sounds okay to you?

Please feel free to let us/me know your thoughts, and thank you again!

Dear Friends,

My crowdfunding page is now live on CrowdJustice at

<https://www.crowdjustice.com/case/uphold-freedom-of-speech-in-our-universities/>

Bath Spa University vetoed my research into people who reverse gender reassignment. This is a denial of the right to free speech and discussion, and I brought a legal action against them.

I am fundraising to continue the legal action against this decision, and I believe that this case is important to us all. Free speech is a cornerstone of a democratic society, as is an independent academia able to carry out research.

Here are two ways you can help right now:

1. Pledge any amount you can:
<https://www.crowdjustice.com/case/uphold-freedom-of-speech-in-our-universities/>
2. Share the campaign on your social media networks and email two friends asking them to pledge and share:
<https://www.crowdjustice.com/case/uphold-freedom-of-speech-in-our-universities/>

I can't do any of this without you. So please donate and share to be part of this campaign.

Thank you very much.

Very best wishes,

James.

For context, Marchiano provided feedback on Lisa Littman's ROGD study in 2018. However, youthtranscriticalprofessionals was one of the three anti-trans websites surveyed for that study. The ROGD study does not disclose Marchiano's dual role here. (<https://rogd.fi/wp-content/uploads/2021/10/pone.0214157.s001.pdf>)

Procedure

A 90-question survey instrument with multiple choice, Likert-type, and open-ended questions was created by the researcher. The survey was designed for parents (respondents) to complete about their adolescent and young adult children. The survey was uploaded onto Survey Monkey (SurveyMonkey, Palo Alto, CA, USA) via an account that was HIPAA-enabled. IRB approval for the study from the Icahn School of Medicine at Mount Sinai in New York, NY was received. Recruitment information with a link to the survey was placed on three websites where parents and professionals had been observed to describe rapid onset of gender dysphoria (4thwavenow, transgender trend, and youthtranscriticalprofessionals). Website moderators and potential participants were encouraged to share the recruitment information and link to the survey with any individuals or communities that they thought might include eligible participants to expand the reach of the project through snowball sampling techniques. The survey was active from June 29, 2016 to October 12, 2016 (3.5 months) and took 30–60 minutes to complete. Participants completed the survey at a time and place of their own choosing. Data were collected anonymously and stored securely with Survey Monkey.

Hi Jamie,

It has been a while since we spoke. Lisa forwarded to me your piece <https://youthtranscriticalprofessionals.org/2017/07/22/you-cant-feel-like-a-girl-an-essay-by-jamie-shupe/amp/> and while it was very lengthy, when you said you thought you were an aspie, it was highly significant as this is a population I have done some work with and have found they are very vulnerable to cults and mind control predators.... I did a webinar for one of the oldest leading groups to help folks aane.org.

<https://vimeo.com/ondemand/aanehassan>

I have continued my research since we spoke and share your point of view: I have interviewed approximate 10 detransitioners now and done two presentations on the subject to Harvard's program on Psychiatry and the Law- which is a couple of blocks from Children's Hospital.... Everyone there agrees that there is not proper informed consent and also that children should not be given hormones and interventions. one of the co founders is Harold Bursztajn and he is talking with Lisa now and we will be doing some published papers in the future... Please do not announce this yet online. We are still gathering experts and deciding best way to approach this for the public good.

Thank you for your good work,

Steve

She could actually rightfully be accused of helping to teach that exact thing within this community. Have you saw that in their writings? I linked it in the piece I wrote.

There's also the issue with a lot of these activists that while they wrote books and preached theories of a genderless world or of breaking the binary, I actually did it for $1,056. Without any of the trans or legal aid org helping me to do it. That bred a lot of resentment.

So I'm a bit unpopular in certain circles.

Can we talk tomorrow?

Basic questions:

What is the feedback from your statement? Which categories of people/groups hate, love or ignore the proposal?

Did LL say why they fired you -- aside from that explanation?

Can you explain what they fear?

Why do gay groups support this transgender push which seems to be consuming young gays and lesbians?

Where is the money coming from?

Transgender people claim they want to be able to switch sex — so why would they support blurring the distinctions between the sexes?

Will a 'third gender' (AKA a neutral sex) fuel the feminist push for a 'gender free' (AKA no cultural associations with either sex) society'?

Do 'detransitioners' have a website or leader or a common statement?

What is the political importance of the Pentagon policy?

Why did you send your email to me?

Hi Lisa,

I wanted to comment on this excerpt from the Tandfonline article.

"Although this likely is true some of the time, post-transition transsexuals are more likely to "pass" as the target gender, and therefore ought to be less subject to discrimination."

I find myself unable to agree on this and I'll cite some references why.

As noted in the Taskforce survey only 21% of trans community can pass all the time.

Which gets to the heart of blocking puberty, it's not to buy time as you well know, it's to produce better cosmetic outcomes because of the failures of adult transitions. The monsters realized how bad adult transitions were failing to convince the public that their patients were the opposite sex, so they turned to blocking puberty to improve the outcomes.

There's proof of that here in a rare admission from a gender clinic.

"He said in early September that offering services through pediatric care allows patients to start treatment early enough for the best cosmetic outcome, reducing chances of discrimination and allowing for better integration into society – according to the Associated Press."

<http://www.kiro7.com/news/local/seattle-childrens-set-to-open-gender-services-clinic/449459327>

Please don't take this as negative feedback. I think both of your recent articles were great contributions in moving this discussion forward and hopefully in helping to stop this alarming trend.

I hope yo are well.

I won't agree that those who pass will have less suicidal issues because along with passing comes all sorts of new problems. And I'm not just saying this, I see enough bits and pieces in news articles to make case for it. Because beneath passing, they live in constant fear of people finding out who they are, and maybe hurting them, because they're still very much aware of their underlying biology. Trans men certainly can't take their clothing off without people knowing because of the scars. Trans women have the fake vagina issue. Both groups stand a good chance to be wrestling with surgical complications.

I saw something pretty shocking in Portland at a sex club on a night that catered exclusively to trans people and those that want relationships with them. Two young trans females (18-21 range), who were from the puberty blocker generation showed up. They were stunningly beautiful but I could still tell they were born males. But the most striking thing was they had essentially failed to integrate themselves into cis society. Otherwise they wouldn't have been there on trans night, which basically catered to all the people that everyone knew were trans by looking at them. I got the impress that they felt they belong their more with us than the cis people.

It's interesting to note from my reading ability to date gets really bad after surgery for trans women. And I can back that up with articles. If men want them, they only want them with a penis.

Sorry if this was too graphic, but it helps to capture the reality of the situation. I learned a lot in Portland by getting out and seeing the "real" trans community.

I mentioned your story to Elaine Donnelly of CRMLink.org, an independent organization that brings important viewpoints before the military. If you would like to write a one page (it has to be short to be read) letter to Secretary Mattis expressing the impact on you personally, she has contacts who can get it in front of him. She has seen the great influence that personal stories have on swaying opinion and policy and thinks yours has that kind of power.

Hello Jamie,

Thank you for contacting me. I have been wanting to speak to you for awhile actually. I have read your articles and some of your website that I believe you have taken down. I just introduce myself by giving some background. I just wanted to have a little hack blog about lesbian relationship issues. I'm a 'mostly gay' bisexual, married to a woman. This led me to reading a lot more about LGBT identity politics online and being exposed to the child transition issue and that people were very concerned about it. I initially thought the safety and screening would be excellent but I have just become really alarmed at some of the things I'm seeing. I wrote this:

<http://www.thehomoarchy.com/04-youth-transgender-diagnoses-out-would-be-gay-lesbian-bisexual-adults-at-risk-for-unnecessary-medical-intervention/> and this

<https://thexavenow.com/2017/03/08/an-open-letter-to-the-american-psychological-association-204/>

I am very confused about the total picture around youth transitions. On one hand pro early social and medical transition advocate present glowing studies on the results of early social and medical transitions. But when I go to their conferences I hear stories of shifting dysphoria, continuing serious mental illness post transition in some young people, an association with FTMs and BPD. Some studies show support for transition greatly improves mental health and others show that depression rates remain high even after transition. Most all of the stories in the media and presentations of studies show positives. But there is also evidence of increasing regret. A lot of these are young females, the demographic I guess I feel most tibial towards. I see evidence of homophobia fueling transition and stories of young females who desisted describing very unhealthy group dynamics in trans scenes online and IRL.

So despite all the positive news it's not all positive. The negatives are actively censored on liberal news sites, by WPATH, LGBT orgs, and intentionally ignored by pro transition advocates like Elvenoud. These entities have already decided that false positives are an acceptable outcome to trans youth healthcare. I understand cost benefit analysis but I want to know what they are.

I'm also very concerned for kids who really are trans, not just desisters, and weather or not these intense medical interventions in the long run are really best. I'll attach a worse case scenario, Jazz Jennings same issue.

I'm also very critical of what is going on with trans activism right now as a former hard core trans ally. But I'm not a radical feminist. I don't make sweeping statements about or blame the entire trans community. I would like to send you this rough draft of a mission statement and intro to see if this is something that interests you. I am building a beta website with many topics. Due to being kind of obsessive (I'm very well informed, I have a lot that lays out risks to desisters (mostly gay kids). But I would love more feedback from trans people about what they think trans kids need. I don't want to create an us and them attitude. Thanks for your time.

Heading

LGBT people and allies advocating for the safety, mental health, and physical health of gender nonconforming children, minor teenagers, and young adults for the long-term.

Lead Paragraph

We are a group of lesbian, bisexual, transgender, and gay people and allies who want to ensure that all gender nonconforming youth with or without gender dysphoria are cared for, protected, and supported in ways that support their overall lifetime health and well-being. Recently there has been an explosion of minors being diagnosed with gender dysphoria. New protocols involve socially transitioning young children, hormone blockers, cross-sex hormones and even surgery on minors in some western countries. We seek to ensure that there is evidence these practices are safe for children with gender dysphoria who will and won't outgrow the dysphoria (some children and teens outgrow GD). Since these practices are promoted without long-term studies or properly designed studies with control groups on their safety and their benefits are touted by clinicians and the media, there is a need to raise awareness about the potential risks, as well as actual examples of harms already resulting from the 'gender affirming' model in treating gender dysphoric minors. We also want to closely examine the profound effect gender ideology is having on gay, lesbian, bisexual, transgender, and heterosexual young people and its ramifications and why so many more female teenagers are identifying as trans or non-binary. In addition, we want to address the lack of coverage of these issues as well as active censorship of alternative viewpoints and climate of silencing not just by the media but by organizations such as WPATH who sets the standards of care for treating gender dysphoric minors.

I am hoping you can help us with a research project. Comparing notes, we are noticing that the only suicides of trans teens that we hear about are among those kids who are being supported and affirmed, and are transitioning or have transitioned. Leelah Alcorn being the only exception.

Since there are no national statistics that would allow us to test the hypothesis that transition may increase suicidality, we want to try to mine news reports to see what they show. Are you able to put your hands on as many reports of trans teen suicide stories as possible? We can possibly have someone analyze them to see if there are any conclusions that can be drawn.

Can you help?

Eli was very supported in this by their family, friends, and at the State College High School. This past fall, Miriam began to understand their gender identity as more gender fluid than transgender and had recently begun asking people to call them Miriam again.

I'll do some searching as I get time but the obituary websites might yield some fruit. It's bizarre stuff, the trans orgs endlessly scream suicide stats but putting your hands on actual news stories about them is quite hard.

It freaked me out in Portland. This trans woman from the support group committed suicide. The family showed up at an LGBT get together to honor her passing calling her "Scott" and I have no doubt she got buried as Scott. The weirdest thing was nobody would say what her real name was? And I tipped off the Portland media and they wouldn't report the suicide either.

I'll also let you know once I'm done mining my archives.

Yeah it does. One can be married and be bisexual. One's orientation is one thing, whether you act on it is another.

So we're on the same page with terms here, when you said that your sexual orientation was bisexual, I would have thought it unnecessary to say/clarify that you're not heterosexual, since being bisexual would effectively mean not heterosexual, unless we have different understandings of those terms. Bisexual is the attraction to both sexes, heterosexual is having attraction to the opposite sex, as I understand it.

Some people say, and in our writing at LifeSite we use the term same-sex attracted. This clarifies that it's an attraction, and does not define a person. There is some danger in using terms like bisexual (homosexual, gay, etc.) in that it could confuse people into believing that is a fundamental part of your identity as a human being. I mean, we could call me heterosexual or straight, because that denotes in regard to which sex I would have sexual attraction to, it's males, one aspect of the total picture. But my physical, biological identity is female.

So I just want to be sure in using terms that we're on the same page. In using the term bisexual, I would be doing so to say you experience attraction to men in addition to women.

As far as being bisexual, you have attraction to men related to the Autogynephilia, correct? Is that the only element of attraction to men, or is there more to it?

I understand that through much of this, you would have been having sexual relations with people outside of your marriage.

To clarify, are you faithful to your wife now? Is that something you are committed to? And assuming so, when did you commit to that? And is it correct to say that this is being made possible because of your decision to remain chemically castrated? That because of your mental health situation and what would occur chemically/medically for you should you go off that regimen, you're certain you'd be unable to be faithful to your wife?

Thanks so much again.

Dear Mr. Shupe,

Your psychiatrist could consider two diagnoses. The first is Transvestic Disorder (302.3), and either or both of its two specifiers, "With autogynephilia," and "In full remission."

The second is Gender Dysphoria in Adolescents and Adults (302.85). That diagnosis does not offer an "In full remission" specifier.

I do not know the reason for that omission or whether such a specifier was even considered, because I was not a member of the Gender Identity Disorders Sub Work Group of the Sexual and Gender Identity Disorders Work Group for DSM5, and I had no input into the product of the Gender Identity Disorders Sub Work Group. (I was the Chair of the Paraphilias Sub Work Group.)

I can offer a few speculations on the reason for the apparent omission of an "In full remission" specifier from the Gender Dysphoria diagnosis. The first is that the DSM revision took place before the current wave of detransitioners telling their stories on social media and (to a lesser extent) on traditional media. The second is that the Gender Identity Disorders Sub Work Group was definitely responsive to the wishes of trans activists, and there would have been strong opposition to such a specifier from trans activists.

I have one final comment on practical diagnosis. The DSM text occasionally makes general comments on the use of the diagnostic criteria. It might (or might not) say somewhere that an "In full remission" specifier can always be added, whether or not that is explicitly offered as part of the diagnostic criteria. I will leave that to your psychiatrist to dig out.

I have no opposition to your sharing the contents of this email with any psychiatrist you might consult in the future or anywhere else you might see fit.

Sincerely,
Ray Blanchard

Hi, Jamie—unsurprisingly, your story is crossing my desk frequently, and consequently you've been on my mind from the simple human standpoint. When we chatted off and on a while back, I rather thought you were headed toward consolidating your reality as a male, so at one level this isn't a big surprise. But I also wonder a lot on how you're doing—I fear that some on both sides will spare no effort in attacking you, and like a sailor who's been on rough seas too long, sometimes it's a bit hard to get used to walking on solid ground again (speaking from experience on that nautical point). Yes, there are times we long for a billionaire or two as well, yet we're blessed to be well-funded and well-run, and at the same time we're long used to being outgunned more often than not—it's not unusual for two of us to walk into a courtroom and have a dozen attorneys lined up on the other side, etc. etc. But you know this well enough yourself, having seen the gender identity advocacy movement up close and personal.

By the way, I noted the early photo of you at Fort Hood—my dad retired from the 2d Armored in 1961, and I spent a few childhood years on that muggy-buggy olive-drab outpost. Perhaps the high point of my elementary school "career" is documented in the attached photo. One school night dad told me to go to bed early, as he was getting me up early, but wouldn't say why. Turned out he was taking a tank company on maneuvers, and for whatever reason the column had to go right by my school. All I can say is that if you must go to 2nd grade, it's best to do it in an M-48 Patton! That's me between my mom and my older brother. My classmates were duly impressed....

Hi Jamie,

Again, apologies for the delay in responding. It's difficult for me to work on this issue during the work day.

As Brandon said, I am on the board of the Women's Liberation Front and was on the Heritage panel you referenced on the Laura Ingraham show.

Here's a little bit of background. I came to this issue from a radical feminist perspective - the view that in order to fight misogyny, we have to be able to name the category women as adult human females. I remain fiercely committed to that cause. However, in the meantime, a few things happened. One is that someone very close to me (a woman) announced that she is trans. She came out as a lesbian many years ago, and about a year ago, she announced in an email that she is trans. I tried to engage in conversation with her, but she knows my views on this topic, and pushed me away. A few months after that, I learned (on Facebook, of all places), that she had gotten a double mastectomy. I was devastated. The other thing that happened is that when she announced that she is trans, I reached out to the Parents of ROGD Kids group. I am not a parent, but I felt like I needed some support. When I reached out to the ROGD parents group, I got connected with a bunch of parents in my area whose kids are on this path. These parents break my heart every time I talk with them. They are just trying to save their kids from this. My point is that I come at this from several angles: my primary lens is the radical feminist one, but the issue has become deeply personal to me as well.

So, the question then becomes, is there some way that we could work together to break through the media's silence on this issue? I just don't know. Are you familiar with the Gender Critical Action Center? I know the organizers. They have been hammering away at the media.

My instinct is that it will be detransitioners, parents, and athletes who will break this open, not radical feminists, and I am okay with that.

I would love to hear your thoughts.

Kara

Yes, early afternoon sounds good! What do you think about Monday afternoon at 2pm MST. I'm open all Monday afternoon (MST) so flexible!
(I'm not sure what time zone you're in. Family Policy Alliance is based out of Colorado Springs!)

Also, do you mind if another team member joins us?

Thank you so much for making the time for us! I look so forward to talking to you!

Jamie, thank you for looping me in on this. I'd hoped for better from the VA with the current administration; the 2018 "definition" of gender has become circular: "gender reflects traits associated with gender expression" is what it is reduced to, and that is tautological nonsense. As you well know from experience.

I'm hoping two colleagues into the conversation so we have more minds on this, and I'd like you to have a broader range of contacts within ADF in part because I plan on retting from ADF this fall. Both are senior counsel here; Jeff Shafer works a lot with our scholarly initiatives and has been instrumental in locating and growing our network of medical and similar professionals who engage against gender identity ideology. Roger Brooks heads one of our rights-of-conscience teams; he took early retirement from his white-shoe NYC firm to fight the good fight with us—he's litigating the first convincing censorship case we filed, and is quite conversant with transgender issues. Jeff, Roger, as you've not doubt gleaned from the foregoing, Jamie is the former non-binary soul who has reclaimed his male sex. I've come to know him a bit over the past few months.

Jamie, just so I'm clear on where you're at: I understand that the VA doc has written another, non-notarized letter to the SSA parroting its example letter? And based on some quick research, I think SSA is flat wrong about not accepting notarized documents. That is true for certain government record rights—there, you need an original or a certified copy from an agency rather than a notarized copy that you send—so I suspect there is some creative stupidity at work there.

On the VA side, I'd think the agency's inability to keep your sex and the sex-related lab results straight would play into your malpractice claim? I'm very pleased you found an attorney to pursue that, and don't want to inadvertently bollix that action up. If you haven't already, do let your attorney know that we can be of some help if and when he needs medical experts who understand the difference between male and female.

There are a couple non-litigation angles we should consider: private meetings with agency officials in DC, and further public relations work.

On the agency side with our school privacy cases involving professed transgender students, we have met directly with senior officials at the Department of Education to educate them on our side of the story and build credibility with them (we have started filing agency complaints over privacy violations, and wanted them to know who we were when they came in). I've reached out to our liaison attorney in our DC office to see if we have any similar opportunities with either VA or SSA. It may be a dead end if we don't have any connections, but if we do it might be a door to open—we think there is definite benefit to getting the agencies to understand and even defend our view.

Either way, we should seriously consider a second round public relations attack on this stupidity. Someone can claim a new gender, but you can't be the sex you are in the Agencies' eyes. Certainly, your public writing over the last couple weeks has been clear and piercing, and adding a narrative of government

Either way, we should seriously consider a second round public relations attack on this stupidity. Someone can claim a new gender, but you can't be the sex you are in the Agencies' eyes. Certainly, your public writing over the last couple weeks has been clear and piercing, and adding a narrative of government stonewalling and foolish/dangerous enforcement of gender ideology could make a great second round issue when both the Equality Act (formalizing gender identity ideology into nondiscrimination law) and the military transgender restrictions are active media stories. And to my knowledge the VA never withdrew or repudiated its 2014 memo (admitting that there were no long-term studies showing that cross sex treatments were either safe or effective for treating gender dysphoria) which gives a great foundation to attack this current VA nonsense. I know you have strong relationships already on the PR side, but we'd be happy to lend a hand as may be appropriate on that.

Roger, Jeff, any immediate thoughts? I'll forward you the attachments Jamie sent.

How does that sound to you?

Please let me know, and I will confirm with Paul.

Also, I am working on an article after our wonderful conversation yesterday. I will send it along for you to review today for release later today or tomorrow, but I was wondering if you have a different picture you might share with us to use for the article? A different one than the ones you provided Daily Signal and Christian Post. Perhaps a recent one? I'll leave that up to you.

Thank you so much, and I hope you enjoy your time with Paul!

This is awesome Jamie! I also wanted to thank you again yesterday for sharing such a personal journey of finding yourself. What it takes to essentially share that with the world, particularly in your circumstances, is where the truly courageous happens. I don't think it takes courage (real courage) to live a transgender lifestyle. So many, like "Caitlyn" Jenner and "Jazz" are lauded as brave and role models for women and girls. I vehemently oppose these labels, but especially the ones of "bravery". . for many reasons. But what YOU have done-- even if it feels you had no choice, even though you may feel at your weakest point, and still struggling with who you are to an extent. . . is truly honorable and courageous and worth talking about and fighting for each day. I hope now we can be a small part of restoring a few rays of hope and light. And I hope many people start to come into your life that are also able to bring hope and light. And that you may now being able to walk in that.

This seems contrary to everything I know about the government and transparency, but I've been warned by the commission not to speak about it. That said, please don't mention it in any media articles.

Also, I have reclaimed my male name given to me at birth: James Clifford Shupe. Please address me as James in future correspondence. But of course, no hard feelings about screw ups. Even I have to get used to it again after close to six years.

I read through it. I think with some editing, it will make a very attractive manuscript for a publisher. The background of mental illness is something many people need to understand. I think it would need to include even more background, such as some idea (though not in detail) of the abuse you suffered as a child, and how that (likely) triggered your interest in cross dressing. You refer to that, but in reality, that and your near-death experience which added PTSD to your problems need to play more of a part in the introduction to the rest of the book. I don't think you need to say much more than you have already said about being abused, but if there is a connection between that and cross dressing, that connection should be developed more fully. I think some of the information you provide as to your paranoia could be shortened a bit too. It works for a blog, but a book needs to move quickly and grab the reader's interest. Some of what you write does that, but some of it could be modified to make it a quick-hitting intro into your nightmare of gender dysphoria and LGBT activism. Examples of things which set you off, such as the woman who may have snapped a picture of you at the car wash, can be listed with a little less discussion.

Of course the publication of a book will need to be timed according to any litigation we pursue. While they can be done contemporaneously, a book can also hurt the success of a lawsuit. Being strategic about it, will be very important. However, even if we do not want to publish a book until a future date, that is no reason to hold back. The writing, editing, and pursuit of a publisher is going to take time, so that part can take place before and during litigation. Also, publication may also be appropriate during litigation.

James: I spoke with Joe Magri earlier this afternoon. His firm is Merkle & Magri in Tampa, FL. They have good experience with the V.A., medical malpractice, and juries, all of which are important for your case. We discussed several theories and identified the hurdles the case will have to clear in order to avoid dismissal. They are going to do some research to see if the case is viable in Florida and under the Federal Tort Claims Act. He was also curious to know whether we have any experts identified, and I informed him that we are confident we have access to experts, but at this point, we have not yet identified any specific experts.

Florida has a 2 year statute of limitations on medical malpractice claims. However there are some ways around that. In Nebraska, I have gotten around it by proving that my client was mentally incapable of knowing that he had been molested as a child, then once he recalled the molestation, he was mentally incapable of comprehending that he could sue the perpetrator for many years. After about 40 years, he had gotten enough treatment to both know and understand things, then he hired me. We discussed the fact that due to your mental health history, and due to the poor guidance from your medical providers, you were incapable of knowing this was malpractice, then you were unable to appreciate the fact that you could bring a case against the medical providers until very recently. This is called "tolling" the statute of limitations. However Magri also mentioned that there are some more flexible statutes in Florida which may be available to us in this case, so they will research all possible approaches.

One theory with which Magri has had success, is cases in which there is a failure to inform. Basically, if the doctors failed to properly warn you that the hormones could have permanent negative effects, or that some of the intended effects would be irreversible and that you would possibly want such effects reversed, it can be a separate cause of action (theory of recovery). Since I don't have all of your medical records yet, we don't know if this is a plausible avenue in your case, but it is something we'll certainly look for. Again, because of your mental health condition at the time, which was known to your medical providers, warnings and information would probably have had no effect. This goes to my theory that doctors cannot acquiesce to the medical decisions of patients who are known to have seriously compromised mental capacity at the time the medical decision is being made.

He seemed open to our idea that each visit with a medical provider is potentially a new incident of malpractice, building the whole case into a pattern of malpractice.

He was also open to the idea that your medical providers (many of whom were obviously advocates if not activists for the LGBT lifestyle) believed that they had a vested interest in the ends of your treatment, but not so much in you as a person and as a patient. This ties back to the failure to inform theory. They actually avoid disclosing some of the side effects or consequences of the treatment because it can persuade people to decline or discontinue the treatment. If their goal is to champion transgenderism or gender ideology, and not to truly care for the physical and mental health of the person, they can be selective about the information they provide you, to your medical detriment.

Magri did say that it may be a couple of weeks before we hear back from them as they are just about to start a long trial. He said they would get back to me as soon as they could.

James: After speaking with Magri, and talking with Gary, I am more confident that we can file this case and make a serious run at this in Florida. With that in mind, I think it is wise to have a signed agreement between us. I have modified my standard fee agreement to account for the fact that we will be hiring a local attorney to do a fair amount of the litigation on your case. Not knowing what the Florida attorneys charge for med mal cases, I set it at 45% but will lower it if Magri (or whoever we eventually retain) takes these for a lower contingent fee. Just to reiterate, two attorneys does not equate to two contingent fees. The fees are capped at 45% of the recovery and the attorneys have to work out how that is divided between the attorneys.

I suggest you look this over and call me to discuss it before you sign it. I want to make sure you see all it says.

I've also added a little language regarding an hourly rate for things like reviewing contracts or negotiating a book or movie deal, should one come out of this, which it should, especially if the case is successful in Court. Unfortunately, given the nature of the entertainment industry, we'll likely be negotiating with the less financially flush Christian industry or a conservative publisher/producer, but it will still need some review and negotiation.

Therefore, please look this over and give me a call 402-462-2110.

Hi Friends!

Our State ally Christian Civil League of Maine is in need of written testimony against their Therapy Ban Bill LD 1025 (aka ME HB 755). The First Hearing is Wednesday April 10 at 10 am. It will be heard in the Joint Committee on Health Coverage Insurance and Financial Services. It's the traditional Therapy Ban bill but also applies to school psychologists and guidance counselors, alcohol and drug counselors and aides, social workers, pharmacists and pharm techs, professional counselors, marriage and family therapists, pastoral counselors, speech language pathologists and assistants and audiologists. It prohibits the advertising, offering, or administering of therapy to minors for both sexual orientation and gender identity and would designate this therapy a deceptive trade practice.

Thank you friends!

PLEASE SEND YOUR TESTIMONY TO MIKE MCCLELLAN Policy Director of Christian Civil League of Maine cclmainepolicy@gmail.com by Monday (Although the sooner the better!) Also contact Mike (or me) if you are ready, willing, and able to do more (like fly out and testify 😊)

P.S. Maine really needs stories of once-gay or once-transgender individuals if you're copied and not a part of the taskforce please reach out to me (719-213-0771) or Mike through email if you're interested. We'd like to see if you would be willing to fly out to give testimony! If not, we STILL NEED WRITTEN TESTIMONY probably by Monday at the latest! Also, you may be copied because I think you might have great contacts in ME for once-gay and once-transgender individuals. Please Let Mike know, who you know! 😊

Thank you!! May God's face shine upon you!

I suggest you curtail communication with Hanssen. The best way to do this is simply to email her the following: "I need to take a break from our conversations for personal reasons. I'll contact you when I'm ready to start again." Then cut ties. She is an advocate for gender ideology and gender rights, which is about as opposed to you as any group out there. She wrote a law review article about you 2 years ago, and I suspect she has not disclosed that to you. A copy is attached. She is trying to use her law degree to become a pioneer in gender rights. If you were not preparing to take a formal step to take down the gender rights movement, you could go toe to toe with her, but all you are doing right now is giving them evidence to use against you when we get into Court.

Here is a way you can still offer to cooperate with progressive liberal media outlets: You can write Op-eds and send them to the various papers and outlets. When they don't publish them, you can honestly say you offered. I could help you write them if you are interested in this effort. As for the Catholic outlet, which one is it? There are a few which are only Catholic in name and actually champion transgenderism and LGBT.

Those are good Catholic media sources. I'd say go ahead with them. I do have a few very good contacts who can help get your information out in a very high quality fashion, and do so without compromising your med. mal. case. I could reach out to them. When you get the message out that way, it puts pressure on the liberal media to print your stuff too. If you want to draft an Op-ed, I'd be happy to look at it. I'd suggest a single issue, something short, direct, and irrefutable. That is a good way to start.

Some things I meant to mention earlier about the problems I've been juggling with this media stuff is folks like Heritage and FOX etc. have been hammering the left's media establishments for not covering me returning to male. So it doesn't look good if I don't cooperate with left leaning outlets to interview me.

The other piece of this is the parents of these kids also depend on me. They're telling their kids "look, Jamie is telling you this stuff is not only not real and harmful to your health." So I'm trying to balance being a visible role model and fighter for these parents as well. The media largely won't let these mothers speak but they're more than willing to wield me like a sword. So I'm their voice.

At the same time I'm trying to keep my mental health together which honestly is a wreck. And it's not like I'm getting any therapy for that as you know.

I have a media interview this morning with a Catholic outlet and one tomorrow morning with a radio station. After that I'm going to either quit them altogether or really start limiting them. And I'll just tell them it's taking too much of a toll on me and hindering me recovering.

Holy Smokes that is beyond awful! It's scary to think they can just forcefully admit you like that . . . Did they even give you medicine to help "calm" or "even out" your moods? It sounds like a deeply traumatizing experience in the midst of an already tumultuous, confusing journey.

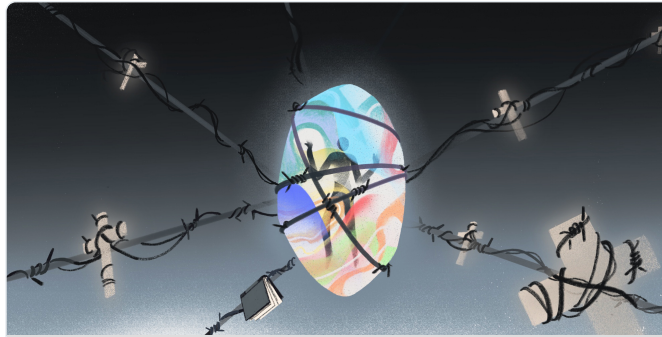

May the God of peace, who surpasses all understanding, grant you peace, and wrap you in it. May your hormones even out from here on out smoothly and gracefully and your mood swings be limited, and I pray people STOP telling you who you are or how you should feel and taking control from you. So much about your journey seems to be a loss of control from people stealing it, hijacking it, co-opting it for their own nefarious purpose, selfishly and without regards for your well-being. I'm so sorry you've been treated with such carelessness by people who should care the most. I hope from this moment on you never feel a loss of control over your mind and life like you felt over the weekend or any time before that. I pray and hope for your stability, the return of proper emotion, logic, right-thinking (as in correct, not conservative 😊) and that you find a great peace in God being in control because you've gifted it to Him, not because it was taken. HE doesn't make mistakes. And you're NOT one. I hope I'm not overstepping or assuming too much. . . I do have a little experience with life spiraling...and it's a wretched feeling. I pray you feel valued, and loved, and priceless. I truly hope this therapist is gracious, kind, good, and thoroughly equipped to guide you in your healing journey. No more counterfeits! You need the real thing!!!

I praise God for you James and your transformation (figuratively and literally I suppose). It's like the Baker Act hold was one last ditch attempt by the enemy to make you feel worthless and make you feel your life is out of control. But it's not going to work. And we're going to pray and I hope it's all up from here!!!!!!

Truly with all sincerity,

Stephanie

Hello, James (I think I heard you are going by James now)!

I hope you are doing well! Did you ever receive the package we sent? And, last time we talked, you said you were headed to church for the first time on Sunday. How did it go? Did you find one you like?

I also wanted to give you details for the Statesmen Academy and see what you are thinking for your travel plans.

The session during which I would like to interview you (I'll send you questions ahead of time!) begins at 11AM Eastern Time in Atlanta on Thursday, July 25th. I believe you told me that you and your wife would plan to drive to the hotel for this instead of fly. Do you plan to drive early Thursday morning so that you can arrive about an hour before the session begins, or will you plan to drive in the day before?

Also, you are welcome to join us for our banquet Thursday evening after the day's sessions are over (and stay the night at the hotel), but I understand if you would both like to drive home on Thursday after the session. It's up to you both!

I just ask that you please let me know your travel plans as soon as possible so that I can make sure we have the right room/food count for each day.

Thank you, James, and I'm so looking forward to finally meeting you!

Blessings,

Autumn

Hi Jaime hope you are well. a friend of mines girlfriends son just came out as trans at 21. A senior at Columbia. Small skinny guy , historically has dated girls. Now dresses like a slutty woman. Is "ocd-ish" and admits that dressing like a woman "gets him off". Was treated as a Pariah at Columbia for being a conservative. Is no longer interested in his studies (philosophy) and wants to deliver pizzas and play music in a skirt instead. Sounds like a perfect storm of autogynephelia ocd depression and social problems to me. Any ideas / tips / favorite all time resources or advice I can pass to her ? Thanks so much. -Assigned mother. James,

I cannot tell you how excited our entire team is to meet you! We have prayed for you, and obviously some of us have had the opportunity to speak with you, but it will be so nice to finally meet you and Sandy in person.

Did you receive your confirmation email with hotel details from Melissa Raney yet?

The only remaining details are the "meat" of the actual sessions. So, to that end, I am sending you the list of questions I plan on asking you so that you won't be caught by surprise. If you'd like to make changes or have concerns about any of the questions, please let me know!

Also, you'll see in the first question, I didn't know if there was anything in your childhood or young adulthood that you feel may have led to decisions to transition to transgender/nonbinary later in life. If not, that's fine and we'll leave that out. That's why it's in brackets. Please just let me know. 😊

- o [Any relevant backstory on your childhood or pre-transition life?]
- o In 2015, you decided to transition to female. What led to that decision and how did you go about doing that?
  - What did the LGBT advocacy groups tell you at the time?
  - What did medical professionals tell you at the time?
  - How did you feel on the cross-sex hormones?
- o Then in 2016, you decided you were nonbinary. Same questions. What led to that and how did you go about effecting that change?
  - What did the LGBT advocacy groups tell you at the time?
  - What did medical professionals tell you at the time?
- o Do you think you received REAL medical care during these times?
- o What do you still suffer from health-wise as a result?
- o You talk about how suicide has become "weaponized." We see that in policy too. Can you explain this to us?
- o 2-part question:
  - What do you wish someone would've told you as you were seeking medical & legal intervention on a transgender/nonbinary journey?
  - Parents are scared and confused when their child comes to them with similar struggles to what you went through. What advice would YOU give THEM?
- o Tell us about your decision to follow Christ
  - What led you to that?
  - How are you doing?
- o Last question: James as you know, you're speaking to a room full of policy-makers, people who believe they've been called into the ministry of public office, and they have the power to make a difference in law and policy. Yet, they also face the same pressure from the LGBT lobby in politics and media that you faced in your own life and medical care. What advice or encouragement do you have for them?

Many blessings to you and Sandy, and safe travels!

-Autumn

Autumn,

Sounds good. I don't think I'll have any issue with that time allotment.

Also, nothing is too personal or off-limits.

I've attached the affidavit I just signed for a faith-based Canadian law firm fighting a school case. I was open and honest in it with some deeply personal stuff because that's what it's going to take to fix and win this.

Please don't share it outside of your organization at this point, until they get it filed with the court.

Thanks again!

Here are the Borrego records I just received today. I don't know if they are complete and actually suspect they are not. The Maryland records are ordered again. They apparently cancelled the request but show that they were also sent to me (but we never received them). I requested them again today. ADF is still in the loop, but I haven't spoken with anyone from ADF for several weeks. My leads on FLA attorneys has also grown cold. I'm not getting calls back, and I'm no longer dealing with the cream of the crop. I think it is now to the point where you might need to just do this on your own in order to preserve your claim. And if that is the case, you can also probably start working with Ryan Anderson, as you won't be scaring any potential attorneys off. In fact, it may now be the only way to find an attorney to come out of the woods and help you.

It is good to hear that you are doing well physically, mentally and spiritually. That is the most important thing in all of this. Keep up all you are doing.

I'll send you the Maryland records when they arrive. How else can I help you right now?

Gary,

Thanks for the article!

I noticed it this morning but couldn't read the story because of the paywall.

I've spoken with the Oregon attorney but things are on hold until sometime in October when he has time to dig into how to reverse the ruling, says he's not familiar with the procedure.

So holding out hope on this end that he'll figure something out then, and be willing to help.

A shame that WSJ didn't mention I've reclaimed my birth sex in that piece, but that's typical.

Prayers for good outcomes in the fights ahead,

James

Here are two autogynephilic authors, writing about autogynephilia, who find it necessary or expedient to distance themselves from me before getting on with their texts. 1/3 amazon.com/Autogynephilia... and amazon.com/Autogynephilia...

Unfortunately though, he attached a non-scientific classification of transsexuals to the term which has caused so much controversy and conflict that I deem it necessary to dump the term for good. You can read more about my definition of femophilia and why I chose not to add 'trans' as a prefix, in chapter four.

Femophilia is a purely sociological term and no claim is made for it to either cause, or be caused by, transsexualism. Furthermore, I am not trying to coin a term... just trying to get a workable phrase to refer to sexual arousal at the idea of being a woman that's not stigmatized.

And, the most important - by a long way - is the work of Raymond Blanchard.

Does this mean that we need to start adopting the term 'autogynephilia'? No, it doesn't, because although it's the best theory we have, it's incomplete and badly formulated. Does this mean that autogynephilia can no longer be seen as transphobic? Not necessarily, because Blanchard's work is clearly disrespectful to transwomen.
Does this mean that we must see Blanchard as a villain?
No, it doesn't, because Blanchard was just stating the obvious, and the only application he could find for his ideas was an obsession with disproving feminine existence.

of transsexual based on whether they had homo or heterosexual tendencies. Sexual weird, right? It is.
While it is certainly true that some transsexuals have autogynephilia, sexuality the relationship between the two is far from understood.

Not surprisingly, when the transsexual community discovered a theory which seemed to suggest that they were just women trapped in men's bodies but men seeking a sexual thrill at pretending to be women, they were not flattered.

Therefore, the term autogynephilia now had two heavy loads to carry: its theoretical difficulties (i.e. it just didn't make sense to anyone except Blanchard alone, not some impossible phenomena like a female 'gender core'. And it was clear to me that the pain of gender dysphoria was far more entrenched in the psychology of an unrequited and tragically impossible love for the woman I could never become.

But if it's so clear to me... why isn't it clear to other femophiles?

The answer is that the love I've described makes autogynephilia seem utterly erroneous to the transgender misfit. Blanchard and his cronies imagine a deliberate conspiracy to deny autogynephilia by trans-women, powered by politics; however, autogynephilia denial is not powered by politics but by common sense.

James, as I thought about your situation, it occurred to me that you have very valuable voice to add to the public discussion of our Schwartz v. City of New York case.

You may be aware of the case; the City of New York passed a first-in-the-nation law censoring counseling conversations even between a psychologist and his adult patient. Specifically, the law prohibits any discussions of any sort that have a goal of helping an individual achieve a heterosexual orientation, or of achieving comfort with his biological gender. (Counseling to help someone achieve comfort with a transgender identity is not prohibited.) Of course the activists want to call such laws conversion therapy bans, but I call them what they are—censorship of private and very personal conversations.

Here's a case summary and additional links We had our first argument to the Court in June, and are waiting for the initial decision.

<https://www.adfflegal.org/details/pages/case-details/schwartz-v.-city-of-new-york>

Because of the nature of Dr. Schwartz's practice and clients, most of our facts in that case focus on sexual orientation. But as I describe above, the law also censors counseling relating to gender dysphoria and gender identity—in a perversely one-sided way.

I believe that your voice carries particular credibility (earned at great cost!) on at least two messages important to the Schwartz case and the wider fight that it represents:

- 1) You were horribly lied to and cheated when medical and mental health professionals failed to give you counseling to help you achieve comfort with your natural sex, and instead of encouraged and "supported" transition;
- 2) You and others who choose to "detransition" need wise mental health counseling as you go through that process, and a law like New York City's that censors your conversations with the professionals you choose to ask for help is an outrage and a cruelty.

Would you be interested in writing an op-ed to be placed in a New York or national paper at a useful moment during that litigation? If so, ADF has some excellent writers familiar with the length and style that appeals to op-ed page editors, who could take even a very rough sketch or outline of thoughts from you—or just talk with you—and then create a draft that I think you will be very happy with.

If you think this might be an opportunity to speak out that makes sense for you, I'd love to talk with you by phone about it. I'll look forward to your thoughts.

That's great. And we can make sure this is not a heavy burden on you. As you probably know, an op-ed is necessarily a short thing—700 words is often the max, or even too long. I'm a lifelong litigator and legal writer (Here's my pre-ADF professional bio), and I've been very impressed by the ADF press-writing team. So it is really true that if you just put down key points from your experience that you think should be made, and perhaps get on the phone with one of our writers so he or she can get to know you and your "voice" a bit, they can put out a great draft that you can then tune.

Timing is not yet clear, and flexible. There will be multiple points during the litigation when an op-ed would be appropriate, and I know you are working on some "legal events" in your own life. So that's another thing we could discuss.

Would you be open to a "get acquainted" phone call some time later this week?

I would like to write something about how the trans narrative is actually making kids feel suicidal -- how the suicidality is because of transition or perhaps being told that if they are trans, they will feel suicidal. I would be interested to know if you have collected and archived news reports about trans teens who were fully supported by their families who nevertheless attempted or completed suicide. I would like to collect these anecdotes.

James: It has been awhile, and I was hoping things would break free on this, but they haven't. My contacts in Florida have grown cold, and no new ones have cropped up. I don't think there is much else I can do for you regarding a medical malpractice lawsuit in Florida. The other option is to look at another state, such as Pennsylvania or California, maybe even Virginia. However, I think you may be better off working with Alliance Defending Freedom from here on out. On another note, I hope you are continuing to do well. Actually, I hope you are doing even better.

James,

Thank you for your thoughtful revisions, almost all of which I have incorporated verbatim (with minor editorial changes). I also thought it was worth including your suggested hyperlinks for additional persuasive effect, which I would do only since they are already in the public record. At any rate, please review the revised versions, and feel free to share additional thoughts or comments.

Let me also assure you that I share your conviction about not conflating "gender" and "sex", a distinction I try to observe at every opportunity. Where I used such terminology here, I felt it was necessary due to statutory language, not because it was my preferred choice of words.

Thank you too for sharing the amicus brief from the Harris case, which I had heard about, but not read. I have heard Walt Heyer speak a few times, and I have met Kathy Grace through my connection with Portland Fellowship. It is a powerful brief, and all of you have stories to tell no one else can tell. I can only imagine the outrage from the other side, which so effectively undermines their popular narrative. You and the others are to be commended for having the courage to tell your intensely private stories on such a public stage.

I will be out of the office (and out of town) over the Thanksgiving holiday weekend, but I will keep in ragged email contact. In the meantime, I hope you have a lot to be thankful for this Thanksgiving, and I appreciate the chance to get to know you a little from afar. Hopefully some day we actually get to meet in person. I am just beginning to understand why Gary McCaleb speaks so highly of you.

James, congratulations! That makes for a very New Year!

I just spoke to Gary, who is driving home from a family visit, and was very excited.

Am I right that the background is that Gary helped connect you with ADF Allied Attorney Herb Grey, who in turn helped you through the legal twists and turns to get to this great result? If so, I'm delighted that ADF was able to make a difference for you in that modest way.

If it seems right to you, I'm thinking that this is a "both/and" media event. That is, you've certainly proven yourself media-adept, and there is no reason you shouldn't push your news out through the channels you have developed.

Meanwhile, my preliminary guess (I haven't been able to speak to our media team yet, some of whom are in transit) is that (with your permission) ADF may also want to use this as a springboard for some op-ed placements, perhaps by you, perhaps by a like-minded doctor . . . we'll talk internally, then let you know what opportunities we see.

And if you would like us to look over a draft press release, we'll be very happy to do that.

Just for coordination, if you would let me know what publications/media outlets you actually contact, that would be great.

Congratulations again, and God's blessings!

That's excellent news, Daniel!

One tweak I wanted to suggest is to try and capture how the bathroom bills, etc, the pressure from conservatives and faith based groups was actually beneficial in hastening the collapse of my fake identity as a female. I would liken that to any kind of addict being forced to confront their addiction and behavior.

Does that make sense?

Thank you. Hard to top the last one but this should be really powerful too. I'm incredibly remorseful about what's in this one and it's taken me this long to be able to confront that behavior. But doing so is part of making amends.

James

James, thanks for your patience on this one. I want to let you know we accept the piece. We're just reviewing it and making some suggested tweaks. Should have edits to you this week.

24 Jan 2020, Shupe's lawyer Herb Grey states that "ADF has requested that you not mention their participation in any way" in an op-ed for the Heritage Foundation's Daily Signal

James,

People at ADF and I have reviewed the attached, with the suggestions noted, but ADF has requested that you not mention their participation in any way. Please delete the last paragraphs about their involvement and mention only that a local attorney stepped up to help you more recently. Nobody knows who I am, so mentioning my name will not add anything to your story. Others who do not have your best interests at heart, so having my name out there will invite unwelcome attention on my role in other high-profile cases and detract from the compelling nature of what you're trying to say.

In no way am I ashamed to be your lawyer, but the focus should be on you, and ADF definitely wants to be left out of it.

Herb

Change tracking in an attached Word document of the proposed op-ed

In April, the Department of Veterans Affairs reluctantly agreed to diagnose me with a sexual paraphilia, the true cause behind my previous sexual confusion. And in December, ~~despite the vicious attacks I'd previously made against them, the Christian legal civil rights and religious liberty organization ADF graciously located one of their allied attorneys who was able and willing to help me reclaim a male legal identity matching the true sex I was born with.~~

~~Despite the harm I've previously caused them, in the spirit of Christianity, my former nemesis, the Alliance Defending Freedom (ADF) agreed to help me change my sex back to male.~~

On December 12, 2019, attorney Herbert Grey, ~~acting in behalf of myself and ADF~~, submitted a new sex change petition to the very Portland court which had historically declared my sex as non-binary. In the documents, we asked for reclamation of the male birth sex I was correctly observed to be at birth, and for the restoration of the precious name given to me at birth by my parents. A necessary legal action required to restore my birth certificate to read "~~female~~," again.

LGBT activists had wasted no time in getting the document changed to "unknown" after my court win.

After receiving news of the petition getting successfully filed, I prayed. Others also joined me in prayer, asking the Lord for speedy success in our endeavor. And within just a short time our prayers were answered. In only a week, a ~~more competent~~ judge signed ~~the that~~ order, ending the legal fiction behind the fraud that had allowed an X marker to now exist on drivers licenses in over a dozen states.

I don't know that ADF was actually harmed, but I'm sure we appreciate the thought!

No, Herb's an ADF ally, but as attorney he was representing you and only you.

I strongly recommend that you not disparage any judge.

Desisters & Detransitioners Study

Seeking volunteers to complete an online, anonymous survey for a Brown University research study

The purpose of this research is to learn about the experiences of desisters and detransitioners—specifically, to explore: factors that may or may not be related to the development of and desistance from transgender identification; whether or not individuals experienced changes in their sexual orientation during and after transgender identification; and (when applicable) what kinds of counseling and informed consent were received when individuals sought medical care to transition.

To participate in this research, you must:

- Be 18+ years of age
- Live in the United States
- Have previously identified as transgender (for at least 6 months)
- Did NOT identify as transgender before you were 12 years of age
- Are NOT identifying as transgender now
- Have stopped identifying as transgender at least 6 months ago

Participation in this study includes:

- An online, anonymous, anonymous survey to determine if you are eligible for this study (15-20 minutes); and
- An online, anonymous research survey about your experiences (10-15 minutes)

To start the screener survey, follow this link:

Hello friends,

Walt and I hope you are doing well. Walt's a little busy, so I'm pitching in to help send this.

Forces in Australia are attempting to make therapy, even prayer by a friend, for a trans person illegal. They claim that change is not possible.

Ed Sparrus of CAUSE is leading an effort to counter the legislation with voices of real people who have changed. I asked him if he couldn't just take what most of us have already posted but he feels his group especially needs the profile information for validity. The end result will be a formal paper, probably something we will find useful in the states.

Read below for the particulars. If you feel this is something that you are called to be a part of, go to the link <https://www.stopsafeschools.org> and follow the instructions at the bottom of the page.

Walt asked Ed for his deadline. It's a legislative effort, so the times aren't fixed. He feels if you could submit no later than the end of March, he can make good use of your story.
